RIOHIRE CASE STUDY

The UK drainage equipment rental market has continued to grow as contractors realise the benefits of either hiring on a short-term basis to meet increased demand or taking on a longer-term rental in order to fulfil contracts.

For the GMC Group, a civil engineering firm based in Preston, the long-term hire of jetting vehicles to undertake a Yorkshire Water scheme has proved a good way to manage budgets based on the requirements of the utility company.

Rioned UK General Manager Andrew Wilson, says that the company has seen increased interest in the longer-term rental options: "While leasing or outright purchase is still the preferred option for acquiring new equipment, Rioned's operation-ready vehicles are a popular option for many contractors.
